

Keenan announces second educational webinar series

TORRANCE, CA – Building on the success of the first series, Keenan has announced a second installment in its popular – and free – educational webinar series. Like the first series, Keenan has teamed with industry leaders to present webinars about the complex issues facing public agencies and health care organizations today.

“The response to the first series was so enthusiastic - more than 800 people participated - there was no question we were going to present a second series,” said Keenan’s Chief Strategy Officer, Henry Loubet. “We’re very pleased to be able offer these important educational webinars at no cost when budgets are so tight.”

The first webinar in this new series will be on October 26 and will address the important national issue of bullying – both cyber and “traditional” – and how to prevent it from starting, spreading, and causing yet another tragedy.

In December, employment practices are on the table while in January effective crisis communications will be the topic. Further along in 2012, the series will focus on pension and health care reform, employee productivity, and the state budget and how it will impact local agencies, health care organizations and taxpayers.

The initial six webinars that took place earlier this year focused on governance and other related issues. In this era of drastic budget cuts, the free webinars were truly appreciated by the participants. “Training funds are limited, so it is great that Keenan can offer these for free,” said Linda Scheschy of the Riverside County Sheriff’s Office human resources team. “They really help me to keep my skills sharp.”
